Your complaint report will be reviewed by Compliance & Enforcement (C&E) staff. Each complaint will be assessed by C&E staff to determine the priority level of review. The assessment will be based on the potential risk to agricultural land; the greater the potential risk to agricultural land will result in a higher priority assignment. The assigned priority rating may result in longer review periods for complaints regarding matters considered by C&E staff to represent lesser risk to agricultural land.

Due to the significant volume of complaints received by the Commission, it is unlikely C&E staff will be able to respond directly to complainants, nor will it be possible to provide updates on all submissions. However, C&E staff will contact you if additional information or clarification of the complaint is required.

The Commission assures you that your complaint will be reviewed. If you do not hear from C&E staff during the course of their review, please do not interpret this lack of communication as inaction on the part of C&E staff. The Commission has tasked C&E Program staff with handling complaints in an efficient manner which may result in less communication with complainants in favour of devoting more time to managing case files.

Thank you for your efforts to help preserve British Columbia's farm land.
